A Kept Promise

When the Democratic house of representatives convened Speaker Champ Clark announced that a saving of $182,000 would be effected by the application of economical business methods in the running of the house. The Republicans scoffed at the idea. They said it couldn't be done. But on the day of adjournment Chairman Fitzgerald of the committee on appropriations announced that instead of the promised $182,000 having been saved the amount was $228,000. "We do not believe that we crippled the house by abolishing a place in the house organization which had been held for years by a 16-year-old girl who never came to the capitol," declared Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania in explaining the methods by which the $228,000 was saved. "We do not believe we crippled the operations of the house by abolishing the positions of a couple of telegraph operators who had not put their hands to an instrument in years. We do not believe we crippled this house by abolishing about twenty policemen who never could be found around the capitol or by abolishing places supposed to be held by men in this building and carried on the payrolls, drawing $900 to $1,000 a year, who were working at the same time in real estate offices in the city of Washington. We have simply made the operation of this house honest."

Electric Bitters

Made A New Man Of Him.
"I was suffering from pain in my stomach, head and back," writes H. T. Allen, Raleigh, N. C., "and my liver and kidneys did not work right. After using a bottle of Electric Bitters I feel like a new man. I am now 60 years old and feel like a 40 year old man."

And Fear Is A Disease

Fear as a disease had not received serious attention until recent years. Now it is recognized by the medical profession that there is a whole list of phobias, as they are called, which are quite distinct from a normal and legitimate condition of fear due to some natural cause.

Thus there is the fear of open or closed places, fear of high places, fear of men and women, fear of crowds and of solitude, fear of animals, fear of insects, fear of darkness, fear of accidents, fear of fire, fear of travel and in fact, fear of anything.

There is an end to the absurdity of acts which may be occasioned by these persistent ideas of fear. Those who possess the fear of riding on a train find no pleasure in traveling; those who have fear of closed places do not enjoy going to church, and generally sit near the door ready to fly at any sign of danger. Various fears may also develop in connection with the occupation of the patient; for instance, barbers sometimes suffer these attacks whenever they see a razor, or telegraphers when they catch sight of their instruments, which finally necessitates giving up the occupation.

Among women especially there occurs the fear of dirt, contagion or infection. The countless bacteria always present in the air are the chief source of annoyance. The patients are always complaining of bad air and are always throwing open the windows. Books are especially avoided as a possible source of contagion. Patients with fear of injury will throw away all needles in the house or they will not wash windows for fear the glass might break and cut them.

The intellect in these cases is not only disturbed, but may be unusually good. Patients exhibit throughout a pronounced feeling of mental illness and frequently a clear insight into the morbidity of the individual symptoms.

The more common of the various phobias as classified by Beard are as follows: Claustrophobia, fear of narrow or narrow places; agoraphobia, fear of open places; astraphobia, fear of lightning; monophobia, fear of being alone; pathophobia, fear of disease; mysophobia, fear of contamination; siderodromophobia, fear of railroad travel; acrophobia, fear of being at a height or looking over precipices; thanatophobia, fear of death.

It is to be emphasized that the phobias in question are not normal fears based, as normal or natural fears are, on some reasonable justifying experience. A reasonable and justifiable normal fear of lightning might arise after the experience of having been at some time in a house struck by lightning.

Other fears, such as the fear of riding in a buggy after being in a runaway, or the fear of a voyage at sea or after a frightful shipwreck or railway accident, is a more or less natural or reasonable fear as the fear of hoodoos and ghosts is among the superstitious or those accustomed to ghost stories and traditions of goblin visitation.

These fears do not require a warped brain for their lodgment though the weakened brain may be more vividly impressed by them. To be regarded as symptoms of disease these fears must be groundless so far as influence external to the brain are concerned. They must proceed from a morbid state of the brain and not from properly exciting external causes. They must be fears peculiar to the individual under peculiar circumstances of cerebral disturbance and not fear common to others and due to causes that naturally produce alarm and frighten.
